Job Application Research

Job applications often have similar components, but each company will ask for specific information unique to its type of business. Research the types of applications you may need to complete when looking for a job. Collect job applications from five different types of businesses. For example, you may get one application from a fast food restaurant, another one from a store at a mall, and one from a local company that has its application on its web site. You will need to bring the applications back to class, so if a business requires you to fill out the application at the job site, explain that you are doing a project for school. Don't fill out the applications. They need to be blank.

When you bring the applications to class, you will be asked to complete one. You will not be able to ask your classmates or teacher any questions when completing the application. However, you can use your practice application. It is important to learn how to complete a job application accurately by yourself because you may be asked to complete one at a job site when you are applying for a job.

Brainstorm places in your community that often hire teenage workers.
